Very strongly recommended for personal reading lists and community library collections

By Midwest Book Review

The old saying that there are 'lies, damn lies, and statistics' seems to be born out every day by news reports from the spectacular falsehoods upon which Bernie Madoff's Ponzi scheme was founded, to the prevarications that seem to be the daily fare of our politicians. It's this phenomena of lies, falsehoods, and deliberate deceptions that are the focused of "Playing the Lying Game: Detecting and Dealing with Lies and Liars, from Occasional Fibbers to Frequent Fabricators" by Gini Graham Scott. This is a 240-page compendium of information and insight into the adult use of lies from the occasional fibber to the compulsive liar. Identifying and detailing six categories of lies, "Playing the Lying Game" is a simply fascinating read. Of special note is Gini Scott's 'Lie-Q Test' for determining how knowledgeable the reader is with respect to detecting prevarications and untruths whether they are encountered in the business world, the family, our friends and associates, or just the ones we tell ourselves. Superbly written, informed and informative, "Playing the Lying Game" is very strongly recommended for personal reading lists and community library collections.

There is no true theoretical model or guiding principle that allows the reader to generalize the litany of examples. They are just examples. Not useful!
