

RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE
UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D.

DOWNLOAD EBOOK : RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL
FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN
PH.D. PDF

Race and Ethnicity

An Anthropological Focus on the United States and the World

EDITED BY
RAYMOND SCUPIN

Click link bellow and free register to download ebook:
RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D.

DOWNLOAD FROM OUR ONLINE LIBRARY

RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D. PDF

It is quite easy to read guide Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. in soft file in your device or computer system. Once again, why should be so hard to obtain the book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. if you can decide on the much easier one? This website will certainly alleviate you to select as well as choose the best collective publications from the most desired vendor to the launched book just recently. It will certainly constantly upgrade the compilations time to time. So, connect to internet and also visit this site always to get the new book daily. Now, this Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. is all yours.

From the Back Cover

Covering basic concepts and research, this book presents state of the art, highly readable essays on both the theoretical issues and empirical studies of race and ethnicity in the U.S. and throughout the world. It introduces the concepts of race, the fallacies of scientific racism, and theoretical perspectives on ethnicity—followed by fourteen chapters that share the empirical findings of anthropologists on race and ethnicity in the U.S. and the world. For individuals interested in getting a global perspective on race and ethnic relations, and reducing some of the superficial media-based characterizations and representations of race and ethnic issues throughout the world.

About the Author

Raymond Scupin is Professor of Anthropology and International Studies at Lindenwood University. His research interests include Asia, Islam, religion, race and ethnicity issues, and political economy. He has done ethnographic research in Thailand and among American Indians in California. Recent publications include Cultural Anthropology: A Global Perspective and Religion and Culture: An Anthropological Focus, both published by Prentice Hall.

Excerpt. © Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved.

Ethnic unrest and tension are prevalent in the contemporary world. Newspapers and television news are rife with stories about ethnic violence among the peoples of the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Africa, Sri Lanka, India, Ireland, the Middle East, and the United States. Thus, as globalization rapidly expands and both undermines and strengthens ethnic and national identities, an understanding of race and of ethnicity issues becomes more pertinent.

This book is an introductory survey of the basic concepts and research in the field of anthropology on race and ethnicity in the United States and throughout the world. Anthropologists have been doing research on race and ethnicity for more than a hundred years and have developed a profound understanding of race and ethnicity issues. However, these anthropological insights have not been communicated widely. Race and ethnicity issues: have had immense effects on both U.S. and global political trends and have created innumerable tensions and misunderstandings among different groups. An anthropological understanding of race and ethnicity has clarified some of these misconceptions and may help relieve some of these tensions.

One of the major objectives of anthropology is to comprehend both the differences and the similarities among different groups of humans throughout the world. A major lesson derived from anthropological research is that as different groups learn about each other's cultural values, norms, behaviors, goals, and aspirations, the less likely they are to maintain rigid stereotypes and misconceptions about one another. Thus, one of the practical results of anthropological research is a reduction in racism, ethnocentrism, and animosities and tensions. As students learn to discern what anthropologists have learned about race and ethnicity issues, they are more likely to be able to adjust and become more productive citizens in an increasing multicultural and globally integrated world. A comprehensive understanding of race and ethnicity issues is a fundamental aspect of a well-rounded liberal arts education.

This text is a collection of state-of-the-art but highly readable essays for undergraduate students. Part I deals with the basic concepts of race and ethnicity. Chapter 1 introduces the discipline of anthropology to students who may have never had a course in anthropology. Chapter 2 focuses on the concept of race, and what anthropologists have learned about "race" based on paleoanthropological, archaeological, population genetics, and other related research for the past hundred years or so. The concept of race has been subject to extensive investigations by both physical and cultural anthropologists, and these research findings need to be communicated to the student in a comprehensible manner. Chapter 3 is devoted to the history of "scientific" racialism and how it emerged as a means of promoting simplistic understandings of race and culture, which, in turn, have fostered forms of racism and misunderstandings throughout the world. One of the major lessons that has emerged from anthropological research, beginning with Franz Boas, is that culture is separate from biology or so-called "racial" characteristics. Students need to have a fundamental understanding of this important finding. Chapter 4 addresses the various features that are expressions of ethnicity or ethnic boundary markers, such as religion or linguistic differences. This chapter discusses concepts and theories of assimilation, pluralism, prejudice, discrimination, primordialist and circumstantialist approaches, nationalism and identity politics, and other basic concepts and theories for understanding race and ethnicity issues. Chapter 5 is an essay on the research of psychological anthropologists and others who have been investigating the universality or naturalism of ethnicity and ethnocentrism. This chapter is provocative and will result in a great deal of critical thinking for the undergraduate student.

Part II of the text addresses the patterns of race and ethnic relations in the United States based on anthropological research. An introductory essay, Chapter 6, delineates the basic patterns of race and ethnicity established by the Anglo and "white" ethnic groups based on immigration patterns and assimilation processes. This chapter includes some basic material highlighting the influence of WASP, or Anglo American, culture that established definitive contours of race and ethnic relations in the United States. Following are chapters (7-12) on American Indians, African Americans, Jewish Americans, Hispanic Americans/ Latinos, Asian Americans, and Arab Americans, written by anthropologists who did ethnographic research among these ethnic groups. This part of the text fulfills the need to have a basic understanding of various ethnic groups in an increasingly multicultural U.S. society.

Part III is globally focused. Its chapters cover race and ethnic relations in Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa, the Middle East, Asia, the Pacific Islands, Europe, and Canada—all written by anthropologists who have ethnographic research experience in these different regions of the world. They draw on local-level ethnic processes to illustrate general macrolevel tendencies. Chapter 13, on Latin America and the Caribbean, focuses on how colonialism has influenced ethnic relations among Indians, Spanish, Portuguese, and African peoples. The chapter (14) on Africa describes how different patterns of colonialism have affected race and ethnic relations in various regions of the continent. The chapter discusses apartheid in South Africa, as well as the tragic episodes of ethnic conflict and genocide in Rwanda. The Middle East is the subject of Chapter 15, which discusses the internal ethnic tensions and differences within Middle Eastern societies. Chapter 16, on Asia, includes discussions of race and ethnicity in South Asia (India and Sri Lanka), East Asia (China and Japan), and Southeast Asia (Thailand and Malaysia). The Pacific Islands chapter (17) discusses various patterns of colonialism and their consequences for ethnic relations throughout Oceania, including recent ethnic trends in Fiji and Hawaii. Chapter 18, on Europe, includes a general discussion of nationalism and identity, as well as the ethnic conflicts in the Balkans and Ireland. Chapter 19 focuses on Canada and the French-Anglo conflict and how ethnic patterns differ from those in the United States. A final, brief chapter concentrates on the United States and other ethnic trends and tendencies that are influenced by globalization. In particular, this chapter critically examines the controversial thesis of Samuel Huntington's Clash of Civilization approach in understanding ethnic and cultural trends. The local-level ethnographic fieldwork that anthropologists have done on ethnic trends throughout the world tends to demonstrate that global theses such as those of Huntington and other political theorists are not adequate in explaining race and ethnic issues.

The editor would like to thank all of the contributors, who provided excellent chapters representing the most recent anthropological research on the various aspects of race and ethnicity. These contributors have also reviewed and suggested revisions for the chapters written by the editor. The editor, and the contributors, would also like to thank Bernard Bernier, University of Montreal; John J. Bukowczyk, Wayne State University; Martin Cohen, California State University, Fullerton; Pamela A. DeVoe, St. Louis Community College, Meramec; Francisco Gil-White, University of Pennsylvania; Dru Gladney, University of Hawaii, Manoa; Phillip Hamilton, Lindenwood University; Robert M. Hayden, University of Pittsburgh; Charlotte Neely, Northern Kentucky University; Mary O'Connor, University of California, Santa Barbara; Susana Sawyer, University of California, Davis; Paul Shankman, University of Colorado, Boulder; Robert Sussman, Washington University; and William C. Young, American Anthropological Association, for reviewing the chapters.

We would also like to thank Sharon Chambliss, managing editor at Prentice Hall, for her organization and efforts during the manuscript review. Our thanks go to Nancy Roberts, Publisher for Social Science, for recommending this textbook for publication.

Ray Scupin

RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D. PDF

Download: RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D. PDF

Why ought to await some days to get or get the book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. that you order? Why need to you take it if you can get Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. the quicker one? You could discover the same book that you get right here. This is it guide Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. that you could get directly after buying. This Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. is well known book worldwide, obviously many people will certainly try to possess it. Why do not you become the first? Still confused with the means?

When getting this e-book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. as reference to read, you could obtain not simply inspiration yet also new expertise and also lessons. It has greater than typical advantages to take. What kind of publication that you read it will serve for you? So, why must obtain this book entitled Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. in this write-up? As in web link download, you could get the e-book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. by on the internet.

When getting guide Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. by online, you can read them anywhere you are. Yeah, even you are in the train, bus, hesitating listing, or other locations, on the internet e-book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. could be your great friend. Whenever is a good time to review. It will boost your understanding, fun, enjoyable, driving lesson, and experience without spending even more cash. This is why online book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. becomes most wanted.

RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D. PDF

Covering basic concepts and research, this book presents state of the art, highly readable essays on both the theoretical issues and empirical studies of race and ethnicity in the U.S. and throughout the world. It introduces the concepts of race, the fallacies of scientific racism, and theoretical perspectives on ethnicity—followed by fourteen chapters that share the empirical findings of anthropologists on race and ethnicity in the U.S. and the world. For individuals interested in getting a global perspective on race and ethnic relations, and reducing some of the superficial media-based characterizations and representations of race and ethnic issues throughout the world.

- Sales Rank: #1171755 in Books
- Published on: 2002-03-14
- Original language: English
- Number of items: 1
- Dimensions: 8.69" h x .36" w x 6.41" l, 1.76 pounds
- Binding: Paperback
- 471 pages

From the Back Cover

Covering basic concepts and research, this book presents state of the art, highly readable essays on both the theoretical issues and empirical studies of race and ethnicity in the U.S. and throughout the world. It introduces the concepts of race, the fallacies of scientific racism, and theoretical perspectives on ethnicity—followed by fourteen chapters that share the empirical findings of anthropologists on race and ethnicity in the U.S. and the world. For individuals interested in getting a global perspective on race and ethnic relations, and reducing some of the superficial media-based characterizations and representations of race and ethnic issues throughout the world.

About the Author

Raymond Scupin is Professor of Anthropology and International Studies at Lindenwood University. His research interests include Asia, Islam, religion, race and ethnicity issues, and political economy. He has done ethnographic research in Thailand and among American Indians in California. Recent publications include Cultural Anthropology: A Global Perspective and Religion and Culture: An Anthropological Focus, both published by Prentice Hall.

Excerpt. © Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved.

Ethnic unrest and tension are prevalent in the contemporary world. Newspapers and television news are rife with stories about ethnic violence among the peoples of the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Africa,

Sri Lanka, India, Ireland, the Middle East, and the United States. Thus, as globalization rapidly expands and both undermines and strengthens ethnic and national identities, an understanding of race and of ethnicity issues becomes more pertinent.

This book is an introductory survey of the basic concepts and research in the field of anthropology on race and ethnicity in the United States and throughout the world. Anthropologists have been doing research on race and ethnicity for more than a hundred years and have developed a profound understanding of race and ethnicity issues. However, these anthropological insights have not been communicated widely. Race and ethnicity issues: have had immense effects on both U.S. and global political trends and have created innumerable tensions and misunderstandings among different groups. An anthropological understanding of race and ethnicity has clarified some of these misconceptions and may help relieve some of these tensions.

One of the major objectives of anthropology is to comprehend both the differences and the similarities among different groups of humans throughout the world. A major lesson derived from anthropological research is that as different groups learn about each other's cultural values, norms, behaviors, goals, and aspirations, the less likely they are to maintain rigid stereotypes and misconceptions about one another. Thus, one of the practical results of anthropological research is a reduction in racism, ethnocentrism, and animosities and tensions. As students learn to discern what anthropologists have learned about race and ethnicity issues, they are more likely to be able to adjust and become more productive citizens in an increasing multicultural and globally integrated world. A comprehensive understanding of race and ethnicity issues is a fundamental aspect of a well-rounded liberal arts education.

This text is a collection of state-of-the-art but highly readable essays for undergraduate students. Part I deals with the basic concepts of race and ethnicity. Chapter 1 introduces the discipline of anthropology to students who may have never had a course in anthropology. Chapter 2 focuses on the concept of race, and what anthropologists have learned about "race" based on paleoanthropological, archaeological, population genetics, and other related research for the past hundred years or so. The concept of race has been subject to extensive investigations by both physical and cultural anthropologists, and these research findings need to be communicated to the student in a comprehensible manner. Chapter 3 is devoted to the history of "scientific" racialism and how it emerged as a means of promoting simplistic understandings of race and culture, which, in turn, have fostered forms of racism and misunderstandings throughout the world. One of the major lessons that has emerged from anthropological research, beginning with Franz Boas, is that culture is separate from biology or so-called "racial" characteristics. Students need to have a fundamental understanding of this important finding. Chapter 4 addresses the various features that are expressions of ethnicity or ethnic boundary markers, such as religion or linguistic differences. This chapter discusses concepts and theories of assimilation, pluralism, prejudice, discrimination, primordialist and circumstantialist approaches, nationalism and identity politics, and other basic concepts and theories for understanding race and ethnicity issues. Chapter 5 is an essay on the research of psychological anthropologists and others who have been investigating the universality or naturalism of ethnicity and ethnocentrism. This chapter is provocative and will result in a great deal of critical thinking for the undergraduate student.

Part II of the text addresses the patterns of race and ethnic relations in the United States based on anthropological research. An introductory essay, Chapter 6, delineates the basic patterns of race and ethnicity established by the Anglo and "white" ethnic groups based on immigration patterns and assimilation processes. This chapter includes some basic material highlighting the influence of WASP, or Anglo American, culture that established definitive contours of race and ethnic relations in the United States. Following are chapters (7-12) on American Indians, African Americans, Jewish Americans, Hispanic Americans/ Latinos, Asian Americans, and Arab Americans, written by anthropologists who did ethnographic research among these ethnic groups. This part of the text fulfills the need to have a basic understanding of various ethnic groups in an increasingly multicultural U.S. society.

Part III is globally focused. Its chapters cover race and ethnic relations in Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa, the Middle East, Asia, the Pacific Islands, Europe, and Canada—all written by anthropologists who have ethnographic research experience in these different regions of the world. They draw on local-level ethnic processes to illustrate general macrolevel tendencies. Chapter 13, on Latin America and the Caribbean, focuses on how colonialism has influenced ethnic relations among Indians, Spanish, Portuguese, and African peoples. The chapter (14) on Africa describes how different patterns of colonialism have affected race and ethnic relations in various regions of the continent. The chapter discusses apartheid in South Africa, as well as the tragic episodes of ethnic conflict and genocide in Rwanda. The Middle East is the subject of Chapter 15, which discusses the internal ethnic tensions and differences within Middle Eastern societies. Chapter 16, on Asia, includes discussions of race and ethnicity in South Asia (India and Sri Lanka), East Asia (China and Japan), and Southeast Asia (Thailand and Malaysia). The Pacific Islands chapter (17) discusses various patterns of colonialism and their consequences for ethnic relations throughout Oceania, including recent ethnic trends in Fiji and Hawaii. Chapter 18, on Europe, includes a general discussion of nationalism and identity, as well as the ethnic conflicts in the Balkans and Ireland. Chapter 19 focuses on Canada and the French-Anglo conflict and how ethnic patterns differ from those in the United States. A final, brief chapter concentrates on the United States and other ethnic trends and tendencies that are influenced by globalization. In particular, this chapter critically examines the controversial thesis of Samuel Huntington's Clash of Civilization approach in understanding ethnic and cultural trends. The local-level ethnographic fieldwork that anthropologists have done on ethnic trends throughout the world tends to demonstrate that global theses such as those of Huntington and other political theorists are not adequate in explaining race and ethnic issues.

The editor would like to thank all of the contributors, who provided excellent chapters representing the most recent anthropological research on the various aspects of race and ethnicity. These contributors have also reviewed and suggested revisions for the chapters written by the editor. The editor, and the contributors, would also like to thank Bernard Bernier, University of Montreal; John J. Bukowczyk, Wayne State University; Martin Cohen, California State University, Fullerton; Pamela A. DeVoe, St. Louis Community College, Meramec; Francisco Gil-White, University of Pennsylvania; Dru Gladney, University of Hawaii, Manoa; Phillip Hamilton, Lindenwood University; Robert M. Hayden, University of Pittsburgh; Charlotte Neely, Northern Kentucky University; Mary O'Connor, University of California, Santa Barbara; Susana Sawyer, University of California, Davis; Paul Shankman, University of Colorado, Boulder; Robert Sussman, Washington University; and William C. Young, American Anthropological Association, for reviewing the chapters.

We would also like to thank Sharon Chambliss, managing editor at Prentice Hall, for her organization and efforts during the manuscript review. Our thanks go to Nancy Roberts, Publisher for Social Science, for recommending this textbook for publication.

Ray Scupin

Most helpful customer reviews

2 of 2 people found the following review helpful.

Excellent as a Textbook or for general information

By Mario A. Cubas

I am a cultural anthropologist and teach the Anthropology of Race & Ethnicity at the undergraduate level in Miami, Florida, and I find this book to be perfect for this. It is written in clear language that is accessible to undergraduate students, and organized in a logical sequence like a good text book, but each chapter is written by a different expert in the particular topic that the chapter covers. In this way it is not "typical" for a textbook, but more like an anthology on Race & Ethnicity. My only problem with it is that it was published in 2003, and I understand it is only available now as a "print on demand" product, or used. I would love to know if there are plans to reprint an updated edition. I will continue assigning this title over and over in my Anthropology of Race and Ethnicity classes.

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful.

Three Stars

By Amber

school

See all 2 customer reviews...

RACE AND ETHNICITY: AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL FOCUS ON THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD BY RAYMOND SCUPIN PH.D. PDF

Be the very first which are reviewing this Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. Based on some reasons, reviewing this e-book will offer more perks. Also you have to read it detailed, page by page, you can finish it whenever and any place you have time. Once again, this on-line e-book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. will give you very easy of reading time and task. It also offers the encounter that is inexpensive to reach and acquire significantly for better life.

From the Back Cover

Covering basic concepts and research, this book presents state of the art, highly readable essays on both the theoretical issues and empirical studies of race and ethnicity in the U.S. and throughout the world. It introduces the concepts of race, the fallacies of scientific racism, and theoretical perspectives on ethnicity—followed by fourteen chapters that share the empirical findings of anthropologists on race and ethnicity in the U.S. and the world. For individuals interested in getting a global perspective on race and ethnic relations, and reducing some of the superficial media-based characterizations and representations of race and ethnic issues throughout the world.

About the Author

Raymond Scupin is Professor of Anthropology and International Studies at Lindenwood University. His research interests include Asia, Islam, religion, race and ethnicity issues, and political economy. He has done ethnographic research in Thailand and among American Indians in California. Recent publications include Cultural Anthropology: A Global Perspective and Religion and Culture: An Anthropological Focus, both published by Prentice Hall.

Excerpt. © Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved.

Ethnic unrest and tension are prevalent in the contemporary world. Newspapers and television news are rife with stories about ethnic violence among the peoples of the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Africa, Sri Lanka, India, Ireland, the Middle East, and the United States. Thus, as globalization rapidly expands and both undermines and strengthens ethnic and national identities, an understanding of race and of ethnicity issues becomes more pertinent.

This book is an introductory survey of the basic concepts and research in the field of anthropology on race and ethnicity in the United States and throughout the world. Anthropologists have been doing research on race and ethnicity for more than a hundred years and have developed a profound understanding of race and ethnicity issues. However, these anthropological insights have not been communicated widely. Race and ethnicity issues: have had immense effects on both U.S. and global political trends and have created innumerable tensions and misunderstandings among different groups. An anthropological understanding of race and ethnicity has clarified some of these misconceptions and may help relieve some of these tensions.

One of the major objectives of anthropology is to comprehend both the differences and the similarities among different groups of humans throughout the world. A major lesson derived from anthropological research is that as different groups learn about each other's cultural values, norms, behaviors, goals, and aspirations, the less likely they are to maintain rigid stereotypes and misconceptions about one another. Thus, one of the practical results of anthropological research is a reduction in racism, ethnocentrism, and animosities and tensions. As students learn to discern what anthropologists have learned about race and ethnicity issues, they are more likely to be able to adjust and become more productive citizens in an increasing multicultural and globally integrated world. A comprehensive understanding of race and ethnicity issues is a fundamental aspect of a well-rounded liberal arts education.

This text is a collection of state-of-the-art but highly readable essays for undergraduate students. Part I deals with the basic concepts of race and ethnicity. Chapter 1 introduces the discipline of anthropology to students who may have never had a course in anthropology. Chapter 2 focuses on the concept of race, and what anthropologists have learned about "race" based on paleoanthropological, archaeological, population genetics, and other related research for the past hundred years or so. The concept of race has been subject to extensive investigations by both physical and cultural anthropologists, and these research findings need to be communicated to the student in a comprehensible manner. Chapter 3 is devoted to the history of "scientific" racialism and how it emerged as a means of promoting simplistic understandings of race and culture, which, in turn, have fostered forms of racism and misunderstandings throughout the world. One of the major lessons that has emerged from anthropological research, beginning with Franz Boas, is that culture is separate from biology or so-called "racial" characteristics. Students need to have a fundamental understanding of this important finding. Chapter 4 addresses the various features that are expressions of ethnicity or ethnic boundary markers, such as religion or linguistic differences. This chapter discusses concepts and theories of assimilation, pluralism, prejudice, discrimination, primordialist and circumstantialist approaches, nationalism and identity politics, and other basic concepts and theories for understanding race and ethnicity issues. Chapter 5 is an essay on the research of psychological anthropologists and others who have been investigating the universality or naturalism of ethnicity and ethnocentrism. This chapter is provocative and will result in a great deal of critical thinking for the undergraduate student.

Part II of the text addresses the patterns of race and ethnic relations in the United States based on anthropological research. An introductory essay, Chapter 6, delineates the basic patterns of race and ethnicity established by the Anglo and "white" ethnic groups based on immigration patterns and assimilation processes. This chapter includes some basic material highlighting the influence of WASP, or Anglo American, culture that established definitive contours of race and ethnic relations in the United States. Following are chapters (7-12) on American Indians, African Americans, Jewish Americans, Hispanic Americans/ Latinos, Asian Americans, and Arab Americans, written by anthropologists who did ethnographic research among these ethnic groups. This part of the text fulfills the need to have a basic understanding of various ethnic groups in an increasingly multicultural U.S. society.

Part III is globally focused. Its chapters cover race and ethnic relations in Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa, the Middle East, Asia, the Pacific Islands, Europe, and Canada—all written by anthropologists who have ethnographic research experience in these different regions of the world. They draw on local-level ethnic processes to illustrate general macrolevel tendencies. Chapter 13, on Latin America and the Caribbean, focuses on how colonialism has influenced ethnic relations among Indians, Spanish, Portuguese, and African peoples. The chapter (14) on Africa describes how different patterns of colonialism have affected race and ethnic relations in various regions of the continent. The chapter discusses apartheid in South Africa, as well as the tragic episodes of ethnic conflict and genocide in Rwanda. The Middle East is the subject of Chapter 15, which discusses the internal ethnic tensions and differences within Middle Eastern societies. Chapter 16, on Asia, includes discussions of race and ethnicity in South Asia (India and Sri Lanka), East Asia (China and Japan), and Southeast Asia (Thailand and Malaysia). The Pacific Islands chapter (17) discusses various patterns of colonialism and their consequences for ethnic relations throughout Oceania, including recent ethnic trends in Fiji and Hawaii. Chapter 18, on Europe, includes a general discussion of nationalism and identity, as well as the ethnic conflicts in the Balkans and Ireland. Chapter 19 focuses on Canada and the French-Anglo conflict and how ethnic patterns differ from those in the United States. A final, brief chapter concentrates on the United States and other ethnic trends and tendencies that are influenced by globalization. In particular, this chapter critically examines the controversial thesis of Samuel Huntington's Clash of Civilization approach in understanding ethnic and cultural trends. The local-level ethnographic fieldwork that anthropologists have done on ethnic trends throughout the world tends to demonstrate that global theses such as those of Huntington and other political theorists are not adequate in explaining race and ethnic issues.

The editor would like to thank all of the contributors, who provided excellent chapters representing the most recent anthropological research on the various aspects of race and ethnicity. These contributors have also reviewed and suggested revisions for the chapters written by the editor. The editor, and the contributors, would also like to thank Bernard Bernier, University of Montreal; John J. Bukowczyk, Wayne State University; Martin Cohen, California State University, Fullerton; Pamela A. DeVoe, St. Louis Community College, Meramec; Francisco Gil-White, University of Pennsylvania; Dru Gladney, University of Hawaii, Manoa; Phillip Hamilton, Lindenwood University; Robert M. Hayden, University of Pittsburgh; Charlotte Neely, Northern Kentucky University; Mary O'Connor, University of California, Santa Barbara; Susana Sawyer, University of California, Davis; Paul Shankman, University of Colorado, Boulder; Robert Sussman, Washington University; and William C. Young, American Anthropological Association, for reviewing the chapters.

We would also like to thank Sharon Chambliss, managing editor at Prentice Hall, for her organization and efforts during the manuscript review. Our thanks go to Nancy Roberts, Publisher for Social Science, for recommending this textbook for publication.

Ray Scupin

It is quite easy to read guide Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. in soft file in your device or computer system. Once again, why should be so hard to obtain the book Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. if you can decide on the much easier one? This website will certainly alleviate you to select as well as choose the best collective publications from the most desired vendor to the launched book just recently. It will certainly constantly upgrade the compilations time to time. So, connect to internet and also visit this site always to get the new book daily. Now, this Race And Ethnicity: An Anthropological Focus On The United States And The World By Raymond Scupin Ph.D. is all yours.